Within

From its' conception, Kitty Yo has enjoyed both a musical and personal affinity to the medium of film. While various titles were used in a whole host of great films over the years, it was almost seven years before the first direct engagement with film music took place.

In 2001 Kitty Yo released the sound track to Esther Gronehorn's socially motivated drama "Alaska.de" which received, amongst others, the prize for best film music in 2002 from the German film critics association. It was during the conceptual development stages of the CD soundtrack that the paths of Kitty Yo and Christian Meyer crossed for the first time. This proved to have a very positive outcome for the soundtrack as Mosermeyerdöring were so captivated by the musical score that the complete film music was then added as a separate CD to the soundtrack.

Back in 2001 the emphasis was much more on stories with fragmental outlines. His current work, noticeably his 2007 solo release, still relates to short stories but ones that form more of a sequence in the mind's eye.

2001 and 2007 are without doubt years which have had a definite influence on his career yet the points in between have also been equally important for understanding Christian Meyer's microcosm.

Born in Brussels, he's been living and working in Berlin for years. It was here that his first work for dance theatres, film and performances started out. He then worked musically and artistically with Rudolf Moser from the Einstürzenden Neubauten, the collaboration of the Moseymeyer duo being the logical consequence that followed.

Further collaborations with Ulrike Haage (Rainbirds), Oliver Doerell (Dictaphone), Stephan Wöhrmann (SWOD), Roger Doering (Orchestra Obscur) and Tanja Ries and tours in Europe, the US and in South America with the Felix Ruckert Company and Arthur Kuggeleyn Company followed.

The story behind “Within” also began life on the road, inspired and shaped by the impressions of being on tour around the world.

“Within” is an album of withdrawal, of going home, of a stroll through realities, a dive into dream-worlds, a restless sprint between electronic rhythms and abstract soundscapes.

“Within” also offers highly seductive and moving elements, which one almost fails to grasp on a first hearing. Spooky and cinematic, mysterious and bewitching.
